

DTU Helps Dioxin Victims

On February, 7th, 2012, representatives of the DTU Rector, post-graduate students and Dr. Le Vu Quan, Dean of Seattle Pacific's Economics Department, visited the Danang Association for Agent Orange and Dioxin Victims and Under-Privileged Children, to provide sympathy, support and encouragement.

A performance by under-privileged children

During the visit, the DTU delegation was greatly impressed by the intelligence creativity and excellent performances of the children.

Ms. Nguyen Thi Hien, head of the association said: “From their very first days of life, these children have encountered many difficulties in living standards. Most of these children feel sorry for themselves and, as a result, sometimes behave badly to others. However, thanks to the support of local organizations and the people, we have helped them overcome their problems as we enhance the quality of the work of our association”. She also expressed her thanks to DTU for their support in these activities.

On behalf of DTU, Dr. Le Duc Toan hoped that, in the future, there will be even more public support for these unlucky children.

(Media Center)